Excerpt from Branded (Nik)

We entered the penthouse, and I immediately led her towards one of the spare bedrooms. It was a crucial error on my end. How did I expect myself not to touch her when she was under the same roof? The smell of her lured me to her side. As I opened the door for her, I informed, "You can sleep here in the guestroom." She was so weary I wasn't sure she'd make it to the bed. When she stumbled over her own two feet, I clutched her elbow to keep her from faceplanting onto the floor. My God, she was beautiful. I had to divert my gaze before I did something impetuous.

Her eyes were heavy as she curled up under the covers. As I turned off the lamp on the nightstand, she grabbed my hand. "Stay. Please?" she slurred.

Oh, hell no. I did not have the strength for that. I brushed my fingertips along her cheekbone. "I'll be right here, little one," I reassured. "I'm not going anywhere. Rest, now."
