Selling the Daughters of America

Despite what many Americans mistakenly think, human trafficking is a gross and violent crime happening in the United States, affecting thousands of young girls and their families. In this startling depiction of human trafficking devices and violence, Evans provides a straightforward look at the problem, and the day-to-day techniques used for recruiting and holding young girls in the hostile sex trafficking environments. This direct approach to what can be an uncomfortable and frightening subject, serves to educate the population about the dangerous crime that is silently sweeping the nation. Specifically written to raise awareness among all mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, friends and neighbors, this book establishes a pattern with which young girls can arm themselves against trafficking methods.

Evans candidly reveals the specific operations of traffickers and the inner workings of their twisted minds. Using case studies and personal experiences, the book demonstrates the reality of human trafficking in our own backyards, and the specific measures young girls can and should employ to protect themselves from becoming victims.

This book paints a picture of the specific skills of traffickers and the terrifying world of their victims. Readers will finish this book with a heightened awareness of their surroundings, and the knowledge necessary to protect themselves and their families against this deplorable crime currently targeting the daughters of America.

About the Author

Marc Evans, a 19-year veteran lieutenant with the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD), has conducted more than 4,000 sex trafficking-related investigations. During his extensive career, Marc spent many years working undercover, investigating pimping, pandering, prostitution, sex slavery and other heinous crimes. From operating as an undercover vice officer in Hollywood along the world famous Sunset Strip, to his supervisory role as the officer-in-charge of an LAPD Vice Unit, Marc has gained invaluable knowledge of sex trafficking-related crimes.

Marc shares his vast professional expertise to expose the inner workings of domestic sex trafficking and its role in the rapid expansion of forced prostitution that occurs on your local streets and behind the doors of brothels posing as legitimate businesses in your community. Marc's raw and gut-wrenching experiences may shock your conscience. However, it is his belief that a shocked conscience can help a society understand the horrific acts associated with those who are selling the daughters of America.

Marc is a graduate of Saint Leo University where he earned a bachelor's degree in criminology and a master's degree in critical incident management. He is an adjunct instructor at Antelope Valley College and has lectured at the University of Central Oklahoma and California State University – Northridge.

Marc has provided domestic sex trafficking training to members of Oxford University, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Drug Enforcement Administration, Homeland Security, United States Courts, Utah National Guard, United States Navy, as well many police departments throughout the United States and Canada.

Marc was featured on various television series that include, MSNBC Investigates, Cops and LAPD-Life on the Beat. He was also awarded LAPD's prestigious Life Saving Medal.
